Chapter 1 by TheTurquoiseGirl

Hailey was sound asleep in a comfy position. Her blonde head was sandwiched between two of her fluffy cushions, drowning the quiet snores that escaped her slightly open mouth. Her right hand clutched another cushion tightly while the other one hang loosely to the side. One of her legs was stretched out, almost resting on the pillow she held.

She was dreaming of that competition again, the karate one that she would compete in. All day long she stressed about it since it was next Sunday.

In her nice dream, she was winning. Tears of joy were running down her cheek while she stood on the podium, the crowd around her clapping. She won the gold medal.

A distant buzzing sound started to echo in her dream along with the faint melody of her best friend's favourite song. She grunted as her body slightly shifted in the bed, she was starting to get suspicious about that song and she especially questioned why it was playing now.

The song started to get louder which woke her up and made her amazing dream disappear, she was already forgetting her dream.

She lifted her head up, moving the pillows and showing her beautifully messed up hair that would send anyone into fits of laughter. Her head slowly moved around while she searched the origin of that music.

Her phone. That was the noise maker she thought.

Grunting, she plunged her head into her heads again but stretched out her left hand to fetch her phone. The buzzing feeling and the muffled melody was making her even grumpier.

As soon as she saw the caller's ID, she grew confused. Why would Adeline call her? Hailey was angry at her anyways since each time she proposed to do something like going to the cinema,

Adeline would refuse saying she had something else to do.

She pondered a bit but then decided to answer the call. She was angry at her.
